

The world's first "Zero-Click" Web image downloader released

You will definitely love browsing the Internet when using this application as you don't have to do anything special to save images.

Most people don't want to mess with so many annoying "click-click-click" operations. They just want the images to be saved in one click or even without having to click at all!

In spring of 2008, A new powerful tool successfully published that downloads Web image easily. The new product is called "[color=#ff0000]PictureImp[/color]", which can be seen as a breakthrough in Web image downloader software field.

As you browse web pages, PictureImp sits in the system tray and waits until you start it. It pops up a small semi-transparent basket. The basket is floating over the page and you can drag any web image and drop it into this basket in much the same way as you would drop a box of chocolates or a bottle of wine into the trolley in the physical supermarket.

PictureImp allows you to make several profiles, each with its own configuration of baskets, and swap between them in one click as you browse the Internet.

There is an opportunity to set up several destination paths for one basket. In this case, each of the paths may have its own naming rule.

Enjoy the effective way it brings!
